La partecipazione dei cittadini
non è nel naturale DNA delle
amministrazioni pubbliche

"Engaging citizens in policy making allows governments to tap into wider sources of information, perspectives and potential solutions, and improves the quality of the decisions reached".
(Michels, 2010)

1. Installing new governance
instruments to enable citizen participation

2. Adopting a participatory reflex in day-today policymaking

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Because it slows down every project or process.

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Because citizens have tons of different interests, the consensus is unreachable.

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Because citizens are already given a right to vote for people to represent them.

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Because it requires a lot of resources to train citizens.

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Because citizens don't understand politics & how a city administration works.

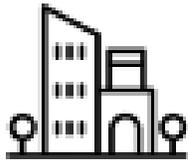

Citizen participation? Hell no!

Because it requires too many human resources.

Citizen participation
shall not only be an institutional tool but
a new practice of
policymaking

Citizen participation can take place in all areas of public action

URBANISM

(roadworks,
urban renewal,
redesigning a
park/public square, etc.)

PUBLIC SERVICES

(access to public services, administrative procedures, town hall
reception,
sports/cultural/social services, etc.).

PUBLIC POLICIES

(investment budgets,
transition policies, social
policies, cultural policies,
educational policies,
etc.).

PLANS/STRATEGIES

(sustainable development
strategy, forward-
looking vision of the
region, climate plan,
strategic plan, etc.).

INFORMATION

Being informed, knowing what is going on, decisions that are made, discussed or planned to be made

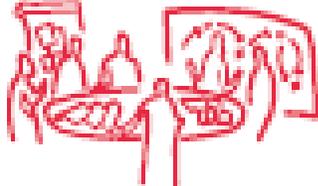

CONSULTATION

Presenting ideas or plans to citizens to collect their opinions, reactions, concerns.

CONCERTATION

Inviting representatives of citizens' interests or citizens to collect their views, negotiate and potentially accept the original plans.

CO-CREATION

Co-creating policies/plans together with citizens at the initial phase of design. Solutions are co-elaborated from the beginning.

CO-DECISION

Making choices and taking 'final' decisions, is done by public authorities and citizens together in partnership mode.

DELEGATED POWER

Public authorities delegate to citizens the power of creation and/or decision. Citizens are granted authority.

CITIZEN CONTROL

Citizens are in full control of power and decision. They are responsible and organized to manage that power.

THE DIFFERENT LEVELS OF CITIZEN PARTICIPATION
